

RABBIT REFERENCES

VETERINARY CARE

We highly recommend that you have your rabbit examined by a veterinarian knowledgeable in rabbit medicine at least once a year. If you do not already have a veterinarian, please refer to the Chicago House Rabbit Society list of Veterinarians in the Chicagoland area. Not only will an annual exam help to prevent a number of medical problems, but you will have a medical staff familiar with your companion rabbit in case of any emergencies.

OTHER REFERENCES:

In addition to any information your veterinarian might supply, please take a look at these resources for more information on the care of your bunny!

www.veterinarypartner.com - this is an excellent website written by veterinarians and other knowledgeable individuals on a variety of topics covering many species of animals. Please refer to the Small Mammal Health Series for many articles on rabbits including a general one on Rabbit Care which covers common diseases, handling and diet. (On the Home Page go to the upper left corner and click on Small Mammals. On the next page click on Small Mammal Health Series and this will take you to a list of articles.

www.rabbit.org - another excellent website of the National House Rabbit Society that contains many informative articles on a wide range of topics. Please refer to this particular article for detailed information on safe fruits and vegetables to feed your rabbit: <http://www.rabbit.org/care/veggies.html>

www.hrschicago.org - the website for our own Chicago House Rabbit Society! Many interesting articles and information on bunnies needing homes!

www.bunnytraining.com - great website by Barbara Heidenreich on how to train rabbits, including her instructional DVD www.clickerbunny.com - Website devoted to clicker training rabbits including a book on the topic and a discussion group.